

"I had believed in the forge as the glowing road to manhood and independence."
(Dickens 86)

After meeting Estella, Pip can't stand his lifestyle as a blacksmith; he begins to distance himself from Joe and acts like a snob.

After meeting Estella, Pip cannot stand his life as a blacksmith; "[he] had [once] believed in the forge as the ... road to manhood" but now begins to distance himself from Joe with his new snobby attitude (Dickens 86).