Five Four Questions

Objective: I look forward to reading these, first of all, to get to know a little bit more about you. I also read these to see how well you can proofread your own writing. It's important to me that you do your best with both of these goals in mind:

- Direct your handwritten responses toward me as your audience, letting me know whatever it is about you that you want me to know. Be expressive; it doesn't have to be dull.
- Avoid sentence fragments and other mechanical errors as best as you know how.

Directions: Write at least four complete sentences in response to each prompt. (If any of your responses has less than that, you'll receive no points for that paragraph. Don't rush through this. Try to fit everything on here, but you may staple on an additional sheets of paper if you feel that you need more room.

One More Thing: Choose only four of the following five questions to respond to; skip one!

1. Write about this year of high school that you have before you: whatever comes to mind.

2. Write about something you do that helps you to relax when life gets stressful.

3. Write about an experience that surprised you in a positive way.

4. Write about your plans after graduating high school; they don't have to be anything definite.

5. Write about an event in your life that, looking back on it, marked a positive change for you.
